Product Recalls

Question

Does the company track the number of its product recalls and the total units/tonnes recalled?

Rationale

Whether companies outsource production or manufacture their products themselves, they are ultimately responsible for putting them on the market.

Research suggests that recalls can damage a brand's reputation and hurt brand value due to consumer hesitance regarding the safety and reliability of the products, which are essential factors in consumers' purchasing behaviour. Furthermore, recall expenses can be significant and can represent financial material challenges to a company, including production disruption, increased disposal costs and increased waste, replacement costs, regulatory fees, and fines, amongst others.

Low-quality products can lead to product recalls and even import bans by regulatory authorities, which can have a direct financial impact while significantly increasing the risk of liabilities and investment costs to bring manufacturing plants to the highest standards.

In this question, we assess the number and quantity of product recalls over the past four fiscal years.

Key Definitions

Recalls: These are actions taken by a company to remove a product from the market. Recalls may be conducted on a company's own initiative or mandated by relevant government agencies.

Data Requirements

For Retailers and Food and Staples Retailing companies, please provide information on private label products, i.e., the company's own brand, not the recalls of supplied goods.

Disclosure Requirements

Disclosure requirements for partially public question. Additional credit will be granted for relevant publicly available evidence covering the following aspect of this question in the most recent fiscal year:

- Number of recalls issued, OR
- Quantity of products recalled
