Tax Reporting

Question

Does the company report on key business, financial and tax information for each tax jurisdiction in which it operates?

Rationale

While companies may use tax optimization strategies in order to optimize their cost structure, they should be transparent about the amount of tax they pay in the countries or regions in which they operate. At the very least, companies should report on their revenues and operating profits on a country-by-country basis or at a regional level. Ideally, they should be equally transparent about the corresponding taxes that they pay. Companies should also be transparent about why taxes paid in one country or region might differ from the expected tax rate – this kind of information can help investors better understand the company's tax structure.

In this question, we aim to identify to what extent companies report their revenues, operating profits and taxes in the countries or regions they operate in and whether or not differences in expected tax rates are publicly explained.

Key Definitions

Operating Profit: Please note that the option for operating profit (otherwise known as EBIT) can be ticked if your company is reporting the following on a country-by-country basis:

- EBT: also called pre-tax profit/operating profit after interest expense
- pre-tax income can also be accepted for operating profit

Taxes Paid: The question is seeking to find out if your company reports corporate income taxes on a country-by-country or regional basis. Consolidated taxes that include other items such as value added tax, regional or industry-specific taxes are not accepted.

Data Requirements

- To receive credit for country-by-country reporting, we expect the countries reported on to cover 90% of the respective financial metric. This means that to tick all the boxes, we expect to see distinct disclosure of:
  - Revenues for all the countries which together make up at least 90% of total revenue
  - Operating profit for all the countries which together make up at least 90% of total operating profit
  - Taxes paid for all the countries which together make up at least 90% of total taxes paid
- In case at least 90% of the respective metric (e.g. Revenues) comes from one country (e.g. "Domestic"), then SAM will accept country-by-country reporting for this specific metric only if this metric (e.g. Revenues) is summarized for the remaining countries as "Other", "Foreign", "International" or similar.
- If your company reports taxes at both the country- and regional-level, please provide data at the country level.
