Employee Development Programs

Question

Does the company have programs on employee development?

Rationale

One of the challenges for both businesses and investors is to fully understand the positive business and financial effects of investing in employees. This question measures how and to what degree companies are able to measure the benefits to their business of their investments in human capital by describing two examples of employee development programs, demonstrating their benefits to the business and asking whether companies are able to quantify these benefits.

Key Definitions

Employee development programs refers to programs that have specifically been developed to improve your employees' skills. Programs providing employees with the basic skills they need to carry out their daily work, language skills, or mandatory compliance or basic occupational health and safety training should not be described.

Examples of programs that are acceptable to discuss here include, but are not limited to, leadership or management development programs, young talent development programs, sales training for sales executives, advanced occupational health and safety training, green or black belt certifications and project management training.

Examples of programs that are not considered as skill development include online programs or classroom training programs to help employees reach certain minimum requirements, such as online compliance training, health and safety training, board training for new board members, training programs that are necessary to bring new employees up to a minimum standard in order to fulfill their job requirements, graduate programs or trainee programs.

The description of business benefits should state the benefits that the company derives from providing the training, not the benefits for the employee undertaking the training. This should not be a description of the employee development program but rather a consideration of how the program aids the company's overall performance or its strategic targets.

Quantitative impact of business benefits refers to either monetary or non-monetary metrics. Examples include employee engagement, decreased turnover, efficiency gains, output gains, revenue generation, and cost savings. These metrics should be directly linked to the employee development program described in terms of a measurable outcome as a relevant indicator of more effective business performance.
