Human Rights Due Diligence Process

Question

Does the company have a company-wide human rights due diligence process?

Rationale

The purpose of this question is to assess whether your company has a due diligence process to proactively and systematically identify potential human rights impacts and where they could occur. Here we ask about the scope of your due diligence risk identification process, whether it covers only your own operations or also your value chain and other activities, and whether you perform a human rights due diligence process before entering into new business relationships (mergers, acquisitions, joint ventures, etc.). We also focus on the type of issues you've specifically addressed when carrying out the due diligence process and what type of vulnerable groups you've clearly considered throughout the process.

A passive approach such as a whistle blowing or confidential reporting system is not sufficient for this question.

There is an increasing number of studies addressing the link between good corporate performance, human rights and financial returns. For example, some studies indicate that businesses that properly address human rights issues are likely to have a more productive and more profitable workforce and avoid costly risks. Key Definitions

Adverse human rights impact: An "adverse human rights impact" occurs when an action removes or reduces the ability of an individual to enjoy his or her human rights.

Human rights risks: The risks that a company's operations/activities/products pose to people's fundamental human rights.

Human rights due diligence: Understood as the process through which enterprises can identify, prevent, mitigate and account for how they address their actual and potential adverse impacts as an integral part of business decision-making and risk management systems. Due diligence can be included within broader enterprise risk management systems, provided that it goes beyond simply identifying and managing material risks to the enterprise itself, to include the risks of adverse impacts related with human rights.

Data Requirements

Supporting documentation should be recent, provide a clear description of the due diligence process, indicate the coverage of business activities and demonstrate that it is an ongoing activity.

The information should be available in the public domain. The information provided has to be included in your public reporting (e.g. annual report, sustainability report, integrated report, company publications, etc.) or corporate website.

For the actual or potential humans rights issues covered, we expect evidence that at least four issues are covered by the due diligence risk identification process. Similarly, for the groups at risk of human rights issues, we expect at least four groups to be covered in the process. We do not expect all issues and all groups to be covered.

The outcomes of conducting the risk identification process should be provided in the following "Human Rights Assessment" question. A passive approach such as a whistleblowing or confidential reporting system is not sufficient for this question.
