Certifications of Agricultural Crops

Question

Does the company track its exposure to agricultural crops including the amount used and whether they received certification from one or more independent third parties in the last financial year?

Rationale

Agriculture is a major driver of global environmental impacts. The industrialized production of agricultural commodities puts high pressure on the ecosystem and requires substantial resources. The awareness of environmental issues associated with food production (such as GHG emission, biodiversity loss, and deforestation) is increasing. In light of rising consumer demands for more transparency and natural products, the global production volume of certified agricultural commodities has increased in recent years.

While it isn't the only solution to a complex problem, voluntary certification does provide a systematic approach to measure and document progress on pre-defined sustainability indicators. Robust, independent sustainability certifications allow stakeholders to monitor and compare companies' positioning on agricultural production.
