Long-Term Incentives for Employees

Question

Does the company offer programs on long-term incentives for employees below the senior management level?

Rationale

Long-term incentive programs are essential for companies to retain well-qualified employees. Such programs serve to orient key decisions throughout the organization around longer-term goals and strategic objectives, giving companies a greater likelihood of success. This question assesses the long-term incentive programs that companies have, the time frame for which performance incentives are paid out, the extent to which these programs apply to employees across the organization and the extent to which they are associated with sustainability principles.

Key Definitions

Long-term incentives: Variable compensation that is tied to the performance of an employee. The performance can be measured in one or multiple years. This can include deferred cash bonuses, stock options and restricted stock units. Employee benefits such as pension contributions (whether mandatory or voluntary) or extra vacation days, should not be included as these are not linked to employee performance.

Sustainability performance: This can relate to any sustainability goals set by your company, whether they are related to environmental issues, social issues such as occupational health and safety, or sustainability issues defined as material by your company.

Senior management level: Refers to employees that are within two levels of the CEO. "Employees below senior management" thus refers to all employees that are below the senior management level. Please note that we also allow the company to choose its definition of "senior management level" according to its business plan and company structure. If your definition differs from our definition due to your business model, please explain this in the question.

Data Requirements

Average period for performance: The average payout period on which incentive programs are based. If different payout time periods are used for different employee categories, please use a weighted average of the payout periods for long-term incentive programs that exist.

Percentage of your workforce below senior management level: This refers to the percentage of employees not considered senior management that are part of the long-term incentives program. For example, if your company has 100 employees, with 10 being in senior management and 10 employees below senior management that are part of the long-term incentives program, then 11% (10 out of 90) of your employees below senior management level are covered in the program.

Long-term incentives for executive management and/or senior management are not accepted in this question.

Please mark the question as "Not applicable" if the company doesn't pay variable compensation (has a policy to not pay variable compensation). Please note, simply not giving shares to employees is not sufficient to accept "Not applicable". The company needs to have an overarching policy to not pay variable compensation.

Please note: If you have 25 or less FTEs in the organization, then please mark the question as "Not applicable".

Disclosure Requirements

Disclosure requirements for partially public questions: Additional credit will be granted for publicly disclosing information on long-term incentive program offered to employees below senior management level.

Questionnaire

Does the company provide long-term incentives for employees below the senior management level? Long-term incentive programs are programs tied to an employee's performance. The performance can be measured during one or multiple years. These incentive programs do not include employee benefits (please see the information button definitions for more information).

Please note: Senior management includes employees that are at most two management levels from the CEO (or equivalent). Below senior management level refers to all employees that are more than two management levels away from the CEO. If the company uses a different definition for "below senior management level" please provide the definition in the answer.

Long-term incentives for the executive management and/or senior management are not accepted in this question.
