Labor Practices Commitment

Question

Does the company have a group-wide commitment to respect labor rights and is it available publicly?

Rationale

The purpose of this question is to evaluate a company's commitment to upholding fundamental labor rights and ensuring fair treatment across its workforce and supply chain. By assessing whether companies have public policies or commitments in place, this question ensures transparency and accountability in areas such as living wages, working hours, equal pay, and worker protection. Strong labor commitments are essential for promoting fair working conditions, reducing risks related to workforce dissatisfaction, and enhancing a company's social license to operate. A clear public commitment to labor rights indicates that a company is proactive in addressing labor issues and aligns its practices with international standards, contributing to a more sustainable and equitable workforce.

Key Definitions

Living wage: A wage that meets or exceeds the minimum required to cover the basic needs of workers and their families, which includes food, housing, clothing, healthcare, transportation, and education. It excludes bonuses and overtime pay. The living wage is often determined by a specific cost of living assessment or benchmark and is distinct from the minimum wage, which may be legally mandated but insufficient to cover basic needs.

Excessive working hours: Refers to working hours that exceed the legal or agreed-upon limit, which can have a negative impact on employees' health and well-being. These limits are set by national laws or collective agreements and aim to protect workers from exploitation.

Maximum working hours: The legally defined or agreed-upon limit for working hours per day or week to ensure the well-being of employees. Any hours worked beyond this are considered overtime.

Equal remuneration: As defined by the ILO "the term equal remuneration for men and women workers for work of equal value refers to rates of remuneration established without discrimination based on sex."

Annual leave entitlement: The number of paid days off that employees are entitled to take each year, as defined by labor laws or company policies, without impacting their wages or social protection benefits.

Notice period before mass termination: The minimum amount of notice that companies must provide employees before executing mass layoffs or terminations. This period is usually mandated by national laws or collective agreements to allow affected workers time to prepare or seek alternative employment.

Own operations: Refers to the workforce directly employed by the company within its core business activities, including all locations and subsidiaries where the company has operational control.

Contractors: Workers employed by third-party entities but providing services to the company, often in the context of outsourced functions or temporary employment arrangements.

Partners: Entities or individuals that collaborate with a company on a long-term basis or as part of a business partnership, often involved in supply chain activities or joint ventures. In this context, it refers to their workforce and labor conditions.
