Human Rights Due Diligence Process

Question

Does the company have a company-wide human rights due diligence process?

Rationale

The question is to assess whether the company has a due diligence process to proactively and systematically identify potential human rights impacts and where they could occur. Here we ask about the scope of the due diligence risk identification process, whether it covers only the company's own operations or also its value chain and other activities, and whether it performs a human rights due diligence process before entering new business relationships (mergers, acquisitions, joint ventures, etc.). We also focus on the type of issues the company specifically addressed when carrying out the due diligence process and what type of vulnerable groups the company has clearly considered throughout the process.

A passive approach, such as a whistle-blowing or confidential reporting system, is not sufficient for this question.

There is an increasing number of studies addressing the link between good corporate performance, human rights, and financial returns. For example, some studies indicate businesses that properly address human rights issues are likely to have a more productive and profitable workforce and avoid costly risks. Key Definitions

Adverse human rights impact: This occurs when an action removes or reduces the ability of an individual to enjoy his or her human rights.

Human rights risks: The risks a company's operations/activities/products pose to people's fundamental human rights.

Human rights due diligence: The process through which enterprises can identify, prevent, mitigate, and account for how they address their actual and potential adverse impacts as an integral part of business decision-making and risk management systems. Due diligence can be included within broader enterprise risk management systems, provided it goes beyond simply identifying and managing material risks to the enterprise itself, to include the risks of adverse impacts related to human rights.

Data Requirements

For the actual or potential human rights issues identified, we expect evidence that some of the listed issues were identified or covered as part of the risk identificaton process.

For the groups at risk, we expect public evidence on the vulnerable groups the company has taken into account in the risk identification process (we expect public proof of having considered the specific risks faced by those groups or of having considered them as relevant stakeholders through the process). We do not expect all issues and all groups to be covered.

The outcomes of conducting the risk identification process should be provided in the following "Human Rights Assessment" question. A passive approach such as a whistleblowing or confidential reporting system is not sufficient for this question.

General risk assessment processes without mention to human rights are not valid.

Best practice would be risk map or heat map usually showing what and where potential issues could be.

Disclosure Requirements

Supporting documentation should be recent, provide a clear description of the due diligence process, indicate the coverage of business activities, and demonstrate that it is an ongoing activity.

The information should be available in the public domain. The information provided has to be included in the company's public reporting (e.g., annual report, sustainability report, integrated report, company publications) or corporate website.
