Labor Practices Programs

Question

Does the company have programs to manage its labor practices?

Rationale

The purpose of this question is to assess how a company ensures the effective management of its labor practices through robust and dedicated labor programs. Transparency and the proper management of labor practices can have a direct impact on a company's workforce and ultimately influence the company's reputation when labor practices are unfair or do not follow local and national laws or standards as well as international norms. Labor related programs seek to cover a set of actions that companies should follow to promote productive employment and decent work. The application of labor programs provides companies with tools to assess and improve performance in aspects such as achieving equal remuneration and social protection.

Key Definitions

Adequate wage (used interchangeably with "living wage"): A wage that provides for the needs of the worker and their family considering economic and social conditions. Here, adequate wages should be at or above cost of living estimates as determined by a living wage/cost of living assessment.

Living wage (also referred to as "adequate wage"): Minimum pay received for the basic number of working hours and required to ensure coverage of workers and their families' basic needs. The living wage consists of the base salary and excludes bonuses and overtime (Fair Wage Network).

Living wage assessments could include at least the following three basic expenses (all): food, housing, and clothing. Additional expenses include, but are not limited to, health, transportation, personal care items, childcare, and education.

For the purpose of this aspect, we will not accept information related to paying the minimum wage. Instead, we expect companies to implement measures to ensure employees are paid at or above living wage/cost of living estimates as determined by a set methodology.

Decent working time/hours: This refers to the limit of hours of work within a day and a week to protect workers' wellbeing. Exceptions are applied, however, should adhere to regulations.

Overtime work: This includes hours worked in addition to the normal, legally mandated working hours during a day or week. (ILO).

For the purpose of this aspect, we expect companies to have programs in place to manage excessive working time (overtime) and ensure employees are paid overtime pay.

Workers' representatives: This refers to persons who are recognized as such under national law or practice, whether they are trade union representatives, namely representatives designated or elected by trade unions or by the members of such unions; or elected representatives, namely representatives who are freely elected by the workers of the undertaking in accordance with provisions of national laws or regulations or of collective agreements and whose functions do not include activities which are recognized as the exclusive prerogative of trade unions in the country concerned.

Equal remuneration: As defined by the ILO equal remuneration for men and women workers for work of equal value, this refers to rates of remuneration established without discrimination based on sex.

Routinely monitoring gender pay gap: It refers to measures taken to actively and regularly assess and work toward equal remuneration, such as conducting assessments, audits, or external analyses of the gender pay gap. Merely reporting pay indicators, without providing clear information on the frequency and methodology of gender pay gap monitoring, is considered insufficient.

Social protection or social security: This includes but is not limited to the provision of medical care, sickness benefits, maternity benefits, invalidity benefits, old-age benefits, survivors' benefits, employment injury benefits due to occupational injuries and diseases, unemployment benefits, family benefits, etc.

For the purpose of this aspect, we expect companies to expand coverage of social protection programs beyond mandated social security contributions.

Paid annual leave: This refers to a period of time set by the employer, when employees can take time away from work while still receiving a paycheck and being eligible for social protection.

Training or reskilling to mitigate negative effects of industrial or climate transition changes: It refers to efforts by the company to support employees in adapting to shifts in business operations and workforce requirements resulting from the transition to a climate-resilient economy or other industrial changes.

For the purpose of this question, this includes initiatives designed to maintain or improve employees' skills in response automation, artificial intelligence, decarbonization, and phasing out of high-emission activities. It does not include training focused on enabling employees to reduce the company's environmental footprint or adapt to physical climate risks, but rather on preventing negative employment impacts (e.g., job loss, skill redundancy) due to industrial or climate transition.
